

PRINCESS LILA AND THE LITTLE DRAGON WHO WAS AFRAID TO FLY

A Story About Courage, Friendship, and Trying Again

In a little kingdom surrounded by green hills lived a cheerful princess named Lila. She loved exploring the castle gardens, climbing little hills, and meeting new friends. But one morning, she discovered someone who needed a little help.

Suddenly, Lila heard a tiny sound.

“Achoo!”

Behind the bush sat a little green dragon with his wings tucked tightly against his back. He looked at Lila with wide eyes and quickly hid his face behind his tail.

Lila sat quietly beside him.
“Hello,” she said. “My name is Lila.”
The little dragon peeked out.
“I’m Toto,” he whispered.
“I came from the hills, but I can’t find my way home.”

Lila soon learned that Toto had a secret.
He had tiny wings, but he had never flown.
Every time he tried, his little feet became wobbly and his heart became nervous.
“What if I fall?” Toto asked.

Lila smiled. "You don't have to fly high," she said. "We can start with one tiny hop." Toto looked at his wings. One tiny hop didn't sound quite so scary.

"We can start with one tiny hop."

Toto took a deep breath. He bent his knees, opened his little wings, and jumped. For one tiny moment, his feet lifted off the ground.
Then—plop!—he landed softly
in a patch of daisies.

Toto looked at the daisies beneath him and giggled. "I didn't fall very far!" he said. Lila laughed. "That's because you were brave enough to try." So Toto decided to try one more time.

"I didn't fall very far!"

"That's because you were brave enough to try."

This time, Toto flapped his wings twice. He rose above the daisies and floated beside a small apple tree. His eyes grew wide with surprise. “Lila! I’m flying!”

Soon, Lila and Toto reached the top of a small hill. A gentle breeze brushed through the grass. Toto looked at the open sky, took a deep breath, and remembered what Lila had taught him: bravery doesn't mean you aren't scared. It means you try anyway.

Toto spread his wings. He pushed gently against the ground and lifted into the air. Up he went, higher than the apple tree, higher than the castle wall, and higher than he had ever imagined!

From high above the hills, Toto recognized a familiar little forest.
“That’s where I live!” he cried.
Lila smiled as they followed the winding path toward his home.

Toto's family rushed out to greet him. His little dragon mother hugged him tightly, and Toto proudly told them about his first flight. Before Lila left, Toto gave her a tiny green leaf shaped like a heart.

When Lila returned to the castle,
Queen Marielle was waiting in the garden.
Lila told her mother about Toto and his first flight.
Queen Marielle smiled and hugged her daughter.

That evening, Lila looked out from her bedroom window. Far beyond the hills, a tiny green dragon flew beneath the golden sunset. Lila waved, and Toto waved his little wing back.

And from that day on, Toto never forgot his first flight. Whenever something felt difficult, he remembered the little hop that started it all. Because sometimes courage begins with something very small—a single step, one tiny try, and a friend who believes in you.

Remember, little one:
You don't have to be fearless to be brave.
Sometimes, courage begins with one tiny try.

THE END

